Scarborough Marsh History and Coastal Biodiversity:

Scarborough Marsh has a long history of human use. When European settlers arrived in the 1600s, they ditched the marsh for haying which provided cattle feed and for channels which allowed boats built inland to float through the marsh and out to sea. In the 1900s, people began to develop the marsh and its surroundings with homes and roads. The marsh was even proposed as a site for the town dump! In 1957, recognizing the ecological importance of the marsh, the Maine Department of Inland Fisheries and Wildlife (MDIFW) began to acquire and manage the marsh. Under the efforts of MDIFW, Friends of Scarborough Marsh, Maine Audubon and many others, the marsh has become a protected, critical habitat for mammals, fish, and shellfish, and birds, attracting thousands of naturalists, especially birders each year.
