ROUTE DESCRIPTION

We head west out of Bethel, then turn south to enter the White Mountain National Forest. A long, gradual climb on a freshly tarred road takes us to the top of Evans Notch, with its stunning views of the surrounding mountains. We then descend quickly, dipping briefly into New Hampshire and having a rest stop at the Appalachian Mountain Club’s Cold River Camp, before crossing the Saco River and back into Maine at Stow. After lunch, you can visit with budding bicyclists at the C.A. Snow Elementary School (leave them a postcard from your home town) and check out the art museum at Fryeburg Academy. The route continues northeast through Lovell and into Sweden and Camp Tapawingo.

TNC SITES OF INTEREST

White Mountain National Forest: The Weeks Act

This year marks the 104th anniversary of the Weeks Act. It is said that the Weeks Act represents the beginning of forest conservation in the American East. In the early 1900s, the eastern mountains were being heavily logged and forest fires had led to high human casualties. Concerned by forest fires, unregulated logging, and tourism loss, people began to rally around the concept of forest conservation. After years of lobbying and public pressure, the U.S. Congress passed the Weeks Act in 1911. It permitted the federal government to purchase private land to protect rivers and watersheds and called for fire protection efforts. With the assistance of the Act and local governments, the White Mountain National Forest was established in 1918 and the forest slowly began to recover. Today, the reforested mountains and hillsides supply forest products and provide magnificent recreational opportunities to the public.
